

Markus Merenmies works at the National Archives of Finland as the Digital Preservation Development Manager. He holds a Master's degree in Information Systems Science from the University of Jyväskylä.

He has participated in developing records management requirements and services for public administration and long-term preservation architecture in Finland. In addition to publishing several articles about digital preservation, Markus is a vibrant spokesperson for the National Archives of Finland, representing its services, systems, and projects. As a director he will develop connectivity between DML forum members and experts.

Markus Merenmies